Juvenile Justice Research: Implications for Intervention and Policy

The State of Kansas has been receiving technical assistance from the Pew Charitable Trusts, Public Safety Performance Project, to comprehensively examine Kansas' juvenile justice system and to develop data-driven policies based upon research and built upon consensus among key stakeholders from across our state. New research and new approaches have emerged to offer states a wide range of effective and cost-effective options for protecting public safety, holding juvenile offenders accountable, and improving recidivism and other outcomes for children and families while containing costs.

On September 9, 2015, the Kansas Juvenile Justice Workgroup met for the fourth time. On this occasion, the Workgroup reviewed research on effective juvenile justice practices as well as additional data presented as follow-up to previous meetings. During this meeting, presentations were made by Edward P. Mulvey, Ph.D., Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, and Mark W. Lipsey, Ph.D., Peabody Research Institute, Vanderbilt University. Below are links to a summary of the meeting, the video of the presentation by Drs. Mulvey and Lipsey, and the two Power Point presentations used by Drs. Mulvey and Lipsey.

The Juvenile Justice Corner

By Randy Bowman, Director
DOC – Juvenile Community-Based Services

For many of us, the holiday season is one of the most anticipated times of the year as we celebrate faith, family and enjoy traditions passed from generation to generation. This season offers us many opportunities to share with others, whether that is of our time to help organize holiday celebrations in our church, school or community, making a donation to help provide for others, or spending time the most important people in our lives. This is indeed a joyous time of year!

As juvenile justice professionals, we also know well that the responsibilities of our work are indeed 24 hours per day, 365 days per year. Whether your job is assisting law enforcement with the emergency placement of a child at juvenile intake, or your caseload includes youth in placement who cannot be with their families and you attend to their need for support and encouragement in this difficult time, or you work in a group home or facility, each of you and your families make an extraordinary commitment to children and youth, particularly during the holiday season. While other professions may offer more holiday friendly schedules, I know of none that is as meaningful, rewarding, or provides a greater opportunity to make a real difference in the lives of individuals and our communities safer. I thank you for that commitment!

On behalf of all of us at KDOC-Juvenile Services, may peace, prosperity, and happiness be yours throughout the holidays and new-year!

Midwestern States Share Innovative Strategies for Hiring People with Criminal Records

In 2012, three Michigan-based employers—Butterball Farms, Cascade Engineering, and Grand Rapids Community College—set out to prove to the business community what they had known for years: hiring people with criminal records is an investment worth making. The trio launched the 30-2-2 Initiative, which aims to work with 30 local organizations that agree to hire two individuals with criminal records and track their progress for two years. To date, the initiative has signed on 19 committed companies that have hired more than 100 employees. Read more . . . .

Prison Kids: A Crime Against America’s Children

An investigative documentary about juvenile justice in America
Throughout history, children as young as seven years old who were accused of wrongdoing have been imprisoned with adults. In the early 19th century, the idea of reforming youth offenders took root in the United States. On Wednesday, panelists discussed juvenile justice reform at the U.S. Capitol following a preview of “Prison Kids: A Crime Against America’s Children.” The investigative documentary, produced by Fusion in partnership with The Root and Univision, details the negative impact of locking up more than 60,000 American juveniles, a number higher than any other country in the world.

Zero Tolerance: How States Comply with PREA’s Youthful Inmate Standard

Note – The “Zero Tolerance” report includes information received from the states. Kansas was polled for this information prior to the 2015 legislative session. At that time, youth between the ages of 15 to 18 that were convicted as adults were not allowed to be in Kansas Juvenile Correctional facilities, which resulted in them being placed in juvenile facilities out of state. In 2015, the law was modified to allow these youth to be kept in Kansas Juvenile Correctional Facilities, which allowed them to be closer to their families and for programing staff to better control the quality and types of programming provided the youth. (KSA 38-2366) Additionally, the minimum age that a juvenile can be prosecuted as an adult changed from 10 to 12. (KSA 38-2347) Currently, there are no juveniles under the age of 18 sentenced as adults that are in state adult correctional facilities, while there are three at the Kansas juvenile correctional facilities.

Campaign for Youth Justice's new report explores how states house youth under 18 in prisons in the new age of PREA compliance and enforcement. Furthermore, this report highlights national trends in juvenile arrests, crimes, and incarceration of children in the adult system.

States Grapple with Girls in the Juvenile Justice System

When she was 11, KiAmber was arrested for defacing school property—a misdemeanor the Tallahassee, Florida, girl insists she did not commit. That experience scared her. By the time she turned 12, she was pregnant. School wasn’t safe—fights broke out all the time. So KiAmber asked to enroll in a program for at-risk girls, funded by the state, where she receives intensive counseling and tutoring. Now, the ninth-grader said, she’s matured and is looking forward to creating a stable life for herself and her 3-year-old daughter. Without early intervention, “I don’t know where I’d be,” Read more . . . .

People of Color Sent to Prison, Put on Probation Far More Than Whites

In the movies and on television, when the crime is solved and the wrongdoer convicted, the story ends, usually with someone headed to prison. But in the real world, those in the criminal justice system say, it’s not the end. A whole other story starts when the convict gets out. It’s a story about not being able to find a job or a place to live. It’s about families losing a significant part of their income and children more likely to suffer childhood trauma, fall behind in school and end up being arrested in a cycle that can last generations. ### Let’s Stop Trying to ‘Fix’ Kids’ Behavior With Incarceration

The juvenile justice system was created to ensure public safety while helping youth overcome difficulties and become successful members of their communities. For many young people who have been adjudicated by the juvenile court, though, the system has become a tool for broader intervention than simply preserving safety: a way of getting kids help. Consequently, well-meaning juvenile courts sometimes make decisions to incarcerate kids in hopes of getting them the services they need. Read more . . . .

Juvenile Justice in a Developmental Framework: A 2015 Status Report

Note – The MacArthur Foundation report includes information received from the states prior to the 2015 legislative session. In 2015, Kansas law was modified to change the minimum age that a juvenile can be prosecuted as an adult from 10 to 12. (KSA 38-2347)

Advances in the understanding of adolescent development have provided a foundation for progress in juvenile justice reform, including changes in state legislation. In accord with the Supreme Court’s recognition of a basic principle—that children are different from adults, and the justice systems that deal with them must be shaped by those differences—state after state has to some degree adopted developmentally appropriate legislation. These reforms mark a dramatic change from the harsh and punitive laws enacted in the 1980s and 1990s. Read more . . . .
