Multidisciplinary Human Trafficking Training

A series of HT training events titled "Kansas Anti-Human Trafficking Training: A Multidisciplinary Focused Approach" will be held across the state for staff that work with at-risk youth. The training will be a full day event (8:30 am – 5:00 pm), and there is no cost to attend. This training event is designed to meet the needs of staff that work in juvenile intake, community corrections staff, and staff in detention centers, as well as staff from DCF, DCF contract agencies, Child Advocacy Centers and law enforcement. The focus of the training will be to provide an overview of HT in Kansas law, defining trafficking, reviewing Kansas statutes that apply to trafficking, identification of victims, the impact of trauma on victims, define the roles of different disciplines and address the practical interventions.

The Department of Children and Families has partnered with the Attorney General’s office to coordinate the training with the participation and support of the Kansas Department of Corrections- Juvenile Services. It will be held at nine venues in October and November, 2019. To promote coordination and local collaboration professionals from different disciplines are encouraged to attend the training together while receiving the same guidance. Seating will be limited and pre-registration is strongly advised. Links to register for the training will be sent out in September. If you have questions you can contact Jim Johnson at jemmesjohnson@ks.gov.

Dual Systems: Justice/Welfare System Youth

A Roadmap to the Ideal Juvenile Justice System

The Center for Juvenile Justice Reform is proud to present its newest publication, “A Roadmap to the Ideal Juvenile Justice System.”

Authoried by Tim Decker, in collaboration with the Juvenile Justice Leadership Network and CJJR staff, this paper lays out the guiding principles and strategies for the ideal juvenile justice system, while providing a plethora of practical examples of these ideals in action. Read more.

Child Welfare Needs to Embrace Youth Potential

While Changing Its Own Systems

We have all heard the labels, and sometimes used them ourselves: Foster youth. Special needs kid. Delinquent. Homeless youth. Such labels are convenient shorthand, but they don’t reflect all the things we need to know about the young person in front of us. They generalize what we think we know about youth in similar circumstances while ignoring the young person’s dreams, talents, fears and triumphs. Yes, it takes longer to say “young person involved in juvenile justice and child welfare” instead of using the shorthand of “crossover youth.” But by avoiding these labels we acknowledge that young people are so much more than the one mistake they make or the list of challenges their family is facing. Kansas Department for Children and Families Ready to Choose from 55 Proposals for Family First Programs

The Kansas Department for Children and Families is preparing to award grants through a new federal program for services aimed at keeping children out of the child welfare system.

Tanya Keys, deputy DCF secretary, told legislators Tuesday the agency has received 55 proposals for evidence-based programs that could receive matching funds through the Family First Preservation Services Act. The programs would address issues like substance use, mental health and parental skills. Read more.

Casey Family Programs: On the Pathway of Hope

Across America, conversations are growing about how to ensure the safety and success of children and families. They turn on this key question: What would the child welfare system look like if we could better support families before they are in crisis, before children are separated?

Today the child welfare system in America is entering a watershed moment. With greater knowledge about what works best to keep children safe, strengthen families and address the lifelong impact of trauma, leaders in government, business, nonprofits, philanthropy and communities are thinking, planning and acting in ways that can help transform our approach to child protection into a true system of child and family well-being. Juvenile Justice Oversight Committee Announces Reinvestment Plan

The Kansas Juvenile Justice Oversight Committee (JJCOC) has approved $8,104,047.72 of reinvestment funds to provide programs and projects to address the needs of juvenile offenders and their families. This total includes over $8 million in renewed statewide contracts and grants to the communities, and $893,300 in newly funded programs/practices for FY 2020. Reinvestment funds are “for the development and implementation of evidence-based community programs and practices for juvenile offenders, juveniles experiencing mental health crisis and their families by community supervision offices, including, but not limited to, juvenile intake and assessment, court services, community corrections and juvenile crisis intervention centers.” Reinvestment funds have been collected since July 1, 2016 and are administered by the Kansas Department of Corrections based on K.S.A. 75-52.164.

New items approved to be funded with reinvestment funds in FY 2020:

- The Crossover Youth Practice Model (CYPM) - Georgetown’s model for crossover youth to help child welfare and juvenile justice systems serve these youth in the best way possible.
- CYPM staff for both DCF and DOC - One full-time employee at the state level for DCF and DOC to assist in managing the CYPM work.
- MAYS2 Screening Tool - Massachusetts Youth Screening Instrument to identify mental health needs.
- Family engagement and family guide - Creation of a guide to assist families through the juvenile justice system, and a technical assistance provider to begin a statewide family engagement process.
- YLS Screener - A short screener to be used pre-disposition to assist with supervision decisions.
- Parent Engagement Training - Training for all juvenile justice stakeholders to understand why and how to engage with families.
- Parent Project - Parent training program targeting family conflict, drug use, gangs, violence, school performance and other challenges that youth/families face that place them at risk to come into contact with the juvenile justice system.

How Widespread is Human Trafficking in the US?

The United States is no exception to the practice of modern day slavery—a crime for which it is rarely held accountable at the United Nations. Mothers Say They Missed Signs their Daughters Were Being Pulled into Human Trafficking

Two mothers are speaking about their experiences after admitting they missed signs that their daughters were being pulled into the world of human trafficking. Both of their daughters were groomed and pulled into trafficking, and one of them didn’t survive. In this show, the women hope their stories will help other parents spot red flags that their children could be targeted. “She’s a goodgirl.” Janiece Charles said. Read more and watch video . . .

Programs and processes already in place from prior years and that will continue with reinvestment funds include:

- Functional Family Therapy (FFT) - Work with youth and families in the home to address risk and protective factors within and outside the family.
- Community-based Sex Offender Risk Assessment and Treatment - Assess and treat the needs of sex offenders within the community.
- Youth Advocate Program (YAP) - Community-based intensive program that provides supervision and support in a youth’s home and community.
- Reinvestment County Grants - Non-competitive grants awarded to counties to address community-specific needs.
- Collaboration Grant - Competitive grants awarded to counties collaborating to implement a community-based program.
- Juvenile Crisis Intervention Centers - Centers to address the needs of youth in crisis.
- The Crime and Justice Institute (CJI) – Continued technical assistance from CJI.
- Moral Recaton Therapy (MRT) - Cognitive-behavioral community-based program to address criminogenic needs.
- Aggression Replacement Training (ART) - Cognitive-behavioral community-based program that addresses aggression.
- Mental Health Training Curriculum - Train-the-trainer process for mental health awareness for staff who work with youth.

According to Megan Milner, Kansas Department of Corrections Director of Community Programs for Juvenile Services, “In order for youth to succeed we must address the youth’s criminogenic needs, we must remove as many barriers as possible and we must meet the child where they are, both situationally and geographically. Forty-seven percent of the FY19 funds were allocated directly to communities to invest in evidence-based programs and practices through the KDOC reinvestment and regional collaboration grants, which means we have more services available to justice-involved youth and families across the state.”

The JDC’s Reinvestment Subcommittee is exploring other opportunities for future reinvestments. Among those items being studied is a request from Laura Howard, Secretary of the Department of Children and Families that includes several initiatives.

Restorative Justice Program aims to Rehabilitate, Not Incarcerate

In the past, when a student was chronically absent from school, or was caught smoking on the school grounds, or committed other offenses that are against the law for people under 18, schools could refer the youth to juvenile court. But because of HB239, a bill passed by the Utah Legislature in 2017 and a measure that was part of the general criminal justice reform movement in the state, schools are much more limited in their ability to refer students to juvenile court.
